Possible answer:

Apps Kill Time

In modern society, mobile phones have become an indispensable part of our lives, bringing us great convenience and rich entertainment. However, the excessive use of mobile phone apps also has a negative impact on our lives.

I often spend hours watching short videos or browsing websites, completely losing track of time that could have been spent on meaningful activities and unaware of the time slipping away.

To reclaim our time, I appeal to everyone to use apps wisely. We can try to set limits, explore alternative activities and engage in more face-to-face conversations with our families and friends. After all, time killed is time wasted and lost forever.

David called again three weeks later. This time he was his old self. “Dad,” he said, “you won’t believe it! I invited some friends over and we listened to the tape together—instant silence, and then a few minutes of sadness. But once we realized we were listening to the sounds of home, we felt better and connected with the people we missed, like we’d been relieved of a heavy burden. I can’t tell you how much that tape meant to me,” he continued, “Thanks, Dad! It was really a special gift.”

From then on, thunder had different meanings for Pat and me. For the next eight months, while David was in Korea, we found ourselves looking forward to thunderstorms. Rather than feeling depressed on gloomy days, we regarded the storms as a special gift, which seemed to tie us closer to a son so far from home. It was no longer just a sound to us but a bond, a reminder of love that stretched across the miles and brought us closer, no matter how far apart we were.
